"Times were tough in Cleveland. Times were tough everywhere. The Great Depression had made a mess of things and people everywhere were struggling to recover. Shanty towns were a part of the landscape in many cities and Cleveland was no exception. Many things could be found in the shanty towns around Kingsbury Run - rusted out cars, discarded bottles, yellowed newspapers and makeshift shelters made of cardboard and tin that acted as houses for many of the city's working poor. Life was bleak in shanty towns but things were about to get worse. The Mad Butcher of Kingsbury Run was on the loose and it seemed the police were helpless to stop him. How many people would die before the murder spree came to an end? Find out in The Cleveland Torso Murders: The Shocking True Story of the Mad Butcher of Kingsbury Run."
